

7-6 University Library Learning Environment

The University Library is located in the busiest part of campus, adjacent to the Inter-faculty Building, the cafeteria, the University Cooperative, and the Health Care Center, providing students with easy access. Since its dedication in 1958, the building has been expanded a number of times, with large-scale remodeling done in AY2007. It was leading university in the nation to have a Learning Commons, a Career Café, and other comfortable learning spaces. In addition, a state-of-the-art academic information service is provided as well. The number of library patrons and the number of books checked out are trending upward. Increased use made the lack of space an issue, but the University's own funds, and the supplementary budget etc., made it possible to decide to expand and remodel. Renovation work finished in AY2017, and the University Library reopened in April 2018.

G: Book Collection

- In addition to the main Library, the University has over 20 library rooms and materials rooms in individual divisions and departments, etc. The figures given in C and D above include library rooms in individual divisions and departments. As the foundation of the University's education and research, the University Library houses approximately 390,000 volumes, including books for learning that support our 21st century liberal arts education integrating the humanities and sciences, and basic/interdisciplinary research books. In addition, we strive to maintain audio-visual materials, e-journals, e-books, and a variety of databases. The library rooms in individual divisions and departments house highly specialized books and periodicals that are suited to the specific field of research.
- [Electronic journals] Approximately 11,000 electronic journals, from major publishers such as Elsevier and Springer, are available.
- [E-books] Approximately 34,000 Japanese and Western e-books are available.
- [Databases] The journal article search databases EBESCOhost, SciFinder, SCOPUS, and IchushiWeb, Japanknowledge, the online encyclopedia and handbook database Gale Virtual Reference Library (GVRL), and the newspaper article database Kikuzo II, Yomidasu Bunshokan, Nikkei Telecom etc., are also available.

2) Learning/Research Support Services Provided by the University Library

A: Reference Services

The Reception Desk at first floor handles questions/consultation regarding use of the Library, requests for copies of literature or to borrow books outside the University, issuance of letters of introduction, etc. A service that merits particular attention is the free literature copy request service for students. When books are borrowed, one-way shipping is free.

B: Literacy Workshops

The University Library plans and hosts a variety of workshops to support learning and research. "Information Literacy" refers to "the capacity to utilize information" required for learning in higher education, and includes the ability to make full use of the Library's materials, electronic resources, and databases, etc.

In addition to the basic information search workshops that are conducted as part of mandatory information processing exercise classes for first year undergraduates, the Library offers "order-made workshops" designed in accordance with the requests of classes, seminars, laboratories, or other groups. The time and content for "order-made workshops" are arranged according to request, so students are able to study, deeply and thoroughly, content that is aligned with their major fields. In this manner, the Library supports students at various stages from education in their first year as undergraduates to research for graduation, graduate school, etc.

C: Library Academic Learning Advisor (LALA) Desk

Since April 2014, the graduate student Library Academic Learning Advisor (LALA) Desk has occupied a spot, with a LALA on duty at all times. LALAs receive training from teaching staff members and library staff members related to academic skills (searching for information in the Library, techniques for writing papers, assistance with writing, etc.). Under the keyword, "learn together grow together", LALAs handle a variety of questions and consultations regarding learning and research, including how to do a literature search and how to write a report. In addition, "LALA Library", collected the books related to academic skills, is installed near LALA Desk. Various information is provided on the blog and some workshops (LALA seminar) are held.

D: Library Student Assistant (LiSA) Program

The LiSA Program is a library revitalization program that began in November 2007, and is conducted through collaboration between Library staff and students. With six months constituting a single period, the Library recruits students who are interested in the Library to experience a variety of work (routine work) under the direction and advice of Library staff members, such as repairing and shelving books. In addition, students propose operational improvements from their own perspectives and plan (voluntary planning) material exhibits, library tours, public relations via Twitter, etc. The goal of the program is to stimulate the motivation to learn proactively, through the experience of coming into contact with a variety of library materials, and to form a practical career consciousness through the experience of supporting others.

E: Education results/research findings collection TeaPot (institutional repository)

The institutional repository was officially released in April 2007 to gather and communicate the education results/research findings of Ochanomizu University. It is commonly known as "TeaPot," based on the "Ocha" (meaning "tea") portion of the University's name. In addition to digital release of the periodical Yōji no kyōiku ("Early Childhood Education") beginning with the first issue, videos of creative dance performances by the Department of Dance and Dance Education, and other distinctive content, we are working to release the table of contents information and main body of the bulletin periodicals issued by the University's faculties, divisions, and centers. The cumulative total of items registered as of the end of AY2017 was 37,521. TeaPot can be accessed from the main page of the University website or the main page of the University Library website.
